The Intelligencer.

Home! to the patronage of our readers.

We have from Messrs. Ticknor & Fields, publishers at Boston, another specimen of their ability to cheapen, beautify, illustrate and popularize the choice literature of our language.

We mentioned a few days ago the receipt of their pamphlet compilation of Alfred Tennyson's songs and songs of poems.

Now we have a pamphlet edition of lyrics by John G. Whittier—the Quaker poet—who has so long tuned his harp for the right against the wrong, and who is distinctively known as the anti-slavery poet of this country—as much so as Montgomery was of England.

We have but room for one more notice to-day. The same publishers, Messrs. Ticknor & Fields, have issued the last literary volume of Henry D. Thoreau, under the title of "Letters to Various Persons." In this volume we have some fifty communications by Thoreau to friends and relatives written between 1840 and 1862, the year of his death. They embrace reflections on all topics, and will find all the readers of this kindly writer quite as interested in the subjects and matter of them, as those individuals to whom they were originally addressed. At the end of the book are also, some poems by Thoreau. From one of the "letters" we select the following old discussion upon a theme pleasant to most all minds: that of

THE PHASES OF LOVE.

"Considering how few poetical friendships there are, it is remarkable that so many are married. It would seem as if they yielded too easily to an obedience to nature without consulting their genius. One may be drunk with love without being any nearer to finding his mate."

There is more of good nature than of good sense in the most marriages. But the good nature of most marriages is the counsel of the good spirit or intelligence. If common sense had been consulted, how many marriages would never have taken place; if uncommon or divine sense, how few marriages would we witness would ever have taken place?

Our love may be ascending or descending. What is its character, if it may be said to have?

Love is a severe critic. Hate can pardon more than love. They who aspire to love worthily, subject themselves to an ordeal more rigid than any other. A young friend of mine, who is a different and blind to the world, is so flattered and won by your meeting her on any other than the ascending path? Then duty requires that you should not meet her.

Love must be as much a light as a flame.

Where there is not discernment, the behavior even of the purest soul in effect amounts to coarseness.

In love, the friend of the imagination is as much exercised as the heart, and if either is outraged the other will be estranged. It is commonly the imagination which is wounded first, rather than the heart. It is not so much the more sensitive.

Comparatively, we can excuse any offense against the heart, but not against the imagination. The imagination knows—nothing escapes its glance from its eye, and it is the eye of the heart. My heart may still yearn toward the valley, but my imagination will not permit me to jump off the precipice that deludes me from it; for it is wounded, its wings are clipped, and it cannot fly, even descending. Our "blundering heart," some poet says. The imagination never forgets; it is a re-membering. It is not foundationless, but most reasonable, and alone uses all the knowledge of the intellect.

Love is the profoundest of secrets. Divulged, even to the beloved, it is no longer Love. As if it were merely I that loved you. When love ceases, then it is divulged.

In our intercourse with one we love we wish to have answered those questions at the end of which we do not raise our voice; against which we put our finger to our lips, and answer with the same unfeeling universal aim toward every point of the compass.

I require that thou knowest everything without being told anything. I parted from my beloved because there was one thing which I never heard anything, that I never knew anything, that I never heard anything, that I never knew anything.

The Grand Duchess Marie was born August 18, 1810, at St. Petersburg. Her mother was the beautiful Queen Louise of Prussia, whose death by the Old Napoleon broke by her cruelty to her husband, and laid in an untimely grave by dismembering Prussia, and robbing the King of half his country. Her mother, the Empress of Russia, says the late Marquis of Londonderry, "possessed an indescribable majesty of deportment and fascinating grace that mark this illustrious personage." Celebrated as are all the females connected with the Imperial House of Prussia, there is none of them more bewitching in manner than the Empress of Russia; nor is there existing, according to all reports, so excellent and perfect a being. Such was the mother of the present Emperor of Russia, and his eldest sister, the Grand Duchess Marie, who, with her sister the Grand Duchess Olga, were regarded as the most beautiful women of the empire."

LITERARY.

Interesting Extracts from Current Literature.—The Periodical Press.—Our Book Table.

Harper's Magazine and the Atlantic Monthly for August have been before the public for several days, and it is not worth while to speak of them further than to say that we have rarely seen two more attractive numbers of these periodicals. Their contents are adapted with a great deal of business and intellectual tact to the season of the year, being a style of make-up which of all others the people care to read at a time like the present, when the weather is hot, the mind enervated, and the public pulse run down by the closing scenes of the rebellion.

We have also on our table the regular weekly issues of "Mrs. Grundy," the new comic paper, published in New York—the successor of Vanity Fair, and the would-be London Punch or Paris Charivari of this country. While a few tolerable hits from the pencils and the pens of the managers of "Mrs. Grundy," have so far appeared, a great many insipid and point-to-point attempts have also appeared. The N. Y. Tribune, in a round-about way, intimates that while there is a field for a first-class comic paper in this city, yet, strangely enough, no combination of artists have so far been able to seize the opportunity and occupy the field. The Herald retorts that the Tribune is already the great comic paper, and ably fills the field, and so excludes all competition.

The "Nation" is a new weekly of quarto form, projected and published by Mr. Richards, the late publisher of the New York Independent, and in many respects such a paper as the Century, started by Thomas McElrath, a few years ago. It contains thirty-two well-filled pages, and embraces the news of the day, short editorials, dramatic critiques, literary notes, and notices of the fine arts. If the "Nation" continues upon the present basis it will really be a capital paper, and will fill an undisputed sphere of its own in the weekly issues of the day. It has published some original articles of marked ability so far. The publisher understands his business if he can only make it pay at three dollars per year—which we doubt.

We have before us the "Commercial and Financial Chronicle," another New York weekly paper, published in quarto form. It is a most elaborate and comprehensive condensation of the industrial and commercial interests that centre, representatively, in New York city. We have rarely seen a paper that so impressed us with a sense of the pains-taking work necessary to produce it. To business men, be their business what it may, the Chronicle is an invaluable advisor and educator. We shall always be glad to see it on our table. The price is $10 per year.

The Eclectic Magazine for August, is adorned by a superb steel engraving of the Grand Duchess Marie of Prussia. Who is she? She is the daughter of the late King of Prussia, and the wife of the late Emperor of Russia. She is the daughter of the late King of Prussia, and the wife of the late Emperor of Russia. "Will you help me out of this mud hole?" said a traveling druggist, who had just been compelled to stop his team in a mud hole, because they were so deep that they could not get out.

"No, I can't stop," said the Yankee, who was heavily loaded and was fearful he would be late for the cars.

"I would take it as a favor, besides paying you," said the druggist.

"What are you loaded with?" asked the Yankee.

"Drugs and medicines," said he.

"I guess I'll try and help you out, for I am loaded with tombstones."

The were seen traveling together after that.

A TRANSFORMATION SCENE.

Footie was once met by a friend in town with a young man who was flashing away very brilliantly, while Footie seemed grave. "Why, Footie," said his friend, "you are far to-day; you don't seem to relish a joke." "You have not tried me yet, sir," said Footie.

GOOD HEARING.

I heard last week, friend Edward, that you was dead.

I'm very glad to hear it too, cries Ned.

A Novel Wedding up in Washington County, Pa.

A couple of "greenies" were recently married near Finleyville, Washington county, with a great "flourish of trumpets." Wishing to employ a certain Squire residing some distance off, and having no conveyance, they applied to a friend, who kindly agreed to transport them if they would be satisfied with the mode of conveyance. They consented to any arrangement which their friend might make, and in a short time he procured a yoke of oxen, attached to a cart, and furnished with sleigh-bells. The would-be happy couple, in style, after which the bride was snatched by the Squire, and driven to the village, started on their journey. The Squire was roused from his slumbers, and the ceremony was performed in the style of a wedding. The bride was snatched by the Squire, and driven to the village, started on their journey.
